

What Your Baby Can Do At Five Months

Babies can move light objects around with their hands and may also try to hold their feeding bottles.

They can recognize faces and their toys and other personal objects.

They can make eye contact and track objects by moving their eyes.

They respond to sound by turning their heads toward the direction of the sound. It can be voices on the phone or sounds from their toys.

They are curious and do things to understand the purpose, such as rattling objects.

They can understand situations and people and change their facial expressions based on them.
