

A Mother's Influence On Her CHILD'S DEVELOPMENT

A mother's love and affection at a young age can influence the child's ability to resist temptations and reflect positive behavior.

The early attachment between a mother and her child can form a stable emotional state in the child.

A mother's patience, resilience, and kindness can set a positive example for her child.

She can teach her children to respect all genders and their opinions.

A mother can support her child's intellectual development by reading books and visiting museums.

References

1. The Role of Maternal Parenting for Children's Behavior Regulation in Environments of Risk; Frontiers
2. Parenting and Child Development: A Relational Health Perspective; SAGE